Our gratitude to the Library of Congress, for allowing us access to their music research archive. Nearly five years of research in their archive enabled us to compile chart data for the last ten years of the 19th century and for the first forty years of the 20th century. This research data was incorporated into our Pop Memories 1890-1954 book (see "The Charts From Top To Bottom" at the very end of this book).

AUTHOR'S NOTE: A PRELUDE TO 20TH CENTURY POP MUSIC

The 20th century picks up the story of the American popular song during its early years as a modest enterprise and ends with it as a powerful industry and catalyst on world culture. This whirlwind trek has been perfectly preserved in scores of sound recordings. Each of these cultural artifacts is an aural time machine into which we can hop back 50 or 100 years and hear Johnnie Ray's "Cry" or John Philip Sousa lead his marching band in "Stars And Stripes Forever."

If you could transport a music lover of 1900 into the present, they would likely be overwhelmed not only by popular music's metamorphosis, but also by its pervasiveness. Recorded music is accessible today nearly everywhere — home, car, TV, Internet, work, restaurant, shopping mall, movies, dentist office, etc. To better comprehend the swift and intense transformation of pop music over the past 100 years, let's travel back to a time when the idea of the American popular song was relatively young.

All music was live music before the advent of recorded sound technology in the late 1800s. Readily available music was truly a do-it-yourself affair; it was not uncommon for folks to lift their voices and pick up their instruments to play a hymn, spiritual or folk tune at home, church, public meetings, and social gatherings. The symphony and opera entertained the upper class in concert halls; at soirees, small chamber ensembles played in their home parlors. In town, the local band put on concerts at the bandshell. Working-class audiences caught the latest vaudeville show which included, among its variety of entertainment, song-and-dance acts who promoted popular songs.

Vaudeville incorporated elements of the minstrel show, in which performers "blacked-up" their faces. Although a travesty, minstrelsy helped to usher in African-American music's strong and consistent influence in shaping the American popular song. Ragtime was the first style of African-American music to reach huge mainstream acceptance and the first truly American musical export to spread worldwide; ragtime fever entered American homes through player piano rolls.

The upright piano increasingly became a common fixture in the American home after its invention in 1829. Novice piano players had difficulty recreating the works of popular classical composers such as Beethoven, Brahms, Chopin, Debussy, and Ravel, so they bought tunes with simple, catchy melodies and sent sheet music sales on a steady climb.

Stephen Foster was the first American songwriter to earn a living, though meager, in writing popular songs with a distinct American flavor such as "Old Folks At Home" which was copyrighted in 1853. Well into the 1870s, composers who wrote "popular" songs outside "serious" European style were dismissed as frivolous.

Song publishers took note of the increasing demand for sheet music and saw the potential for huge profits in popular music. In the 1880s, several song publishers migrated to Union Square, an area in New York City close to the burlesque and vaudeville houses. Songwriters under their employment wrote sentimental ballads with timely themes. Song pluggers pitched these songs to popular entertainers in the area, who, if they chose, would perform the song in their shows. Song pluggers also pitched songs to sheet music sellers, who in turn pitched to sheet music buyers. As live entertainment began to center around Broadway in the 1890s, song publishers also moved further uptown to the block of 28th Street between Fifth Avenue and Broadway which came to be known as Tin Pan Alley.

The device that allowed the music of the moment to be preserved for future generations was not at all intended for entertainment purposes. Thomas Edison invented the phonograph, the first machine to record and play back sound, in late 1877 as a tool for business communication. However, the extreme sensitivity of the talking machine proved it difficult to use correctly; in addition, its recordings of the human voice were difficult to understand. The phonograph recorded sound on to tinfoil-wrapped cylinders which could be played back one time only. In 1887, Edison replaced tinfoil cylinders with solid-wax cylinders, which could be played back again and again. The same year, inventor Emile Berliner introduced his talking machine, the gramophone, which utilized zinc discs instead of cylinders.

Failing at its original purpose for office dictation, the possibility emerged for the talking machine to be a vehicle for entertainment. Early recording engineers found that instruments with a high volume of sound, such as horns, recorded well, while violins did not. To produce clear recordings, bands featured no more than 15 instruments. Vocal recordings sounded best when kept to a minimum of four voices.

In 1889, Edison's North American Phonograph Company made the first commercial musical recordings for operators of West Coast coin-operated phonographs. At the first "phonograph parlors" in San Francisco, customers sat at a desk, ordered a selection for a nickel by speaking into a tube, and listened through a separate tube connected to a cylinder phonograph in the room below where the selection was played. By the mid-1890s nearly every American city had at least one phonograph parlor. And so began the ever-increasing presence of the American popular song. The new century would bring a barrage of new media — radio, movies, television, Internet — for which pop music proved to be the perfect partner.

Each of the cultural artifacts (or recordings) listed within A Century Of Pop Music captures a slice of life along the way. From the cylinder to the CD, from barbershop to hip hop, from Billy Murray to Mariah Carey, this broad sweep of music was the soundtrack to the most dynamic 100 years in American history.

COMPILING THE POP SINGLES CHARTS 1900-1939

In the early decades of the 20th century, a song's popularity was measured by its sales of sheet music and recordings. Radio airplay became a factor in the 1920s. As no definitive chart of popular songs existed from 1900-1939, we compiled charts for those years by incorporating various surveys and sources. These are the sources that we used to compile our research for that era within our Pop Memories and A Century Of Pop Music books.

How the charts were compiled, 1900-1909:

1) The Talking Machine World periodical offered monthly lists of nearly all popular record releases starting in 1905, and frequently provided information on the hottest current hits, although not in chart form.
2) Jim Walsh, the most universally respected authority on the pioneer recording age, provided a wealth of information on popular records and artists from the early years of the century in his 40 years of columns for Hobbies magazine.
3) Record label publications, particularly those of Victor and Edison, contained valuable information on each label's current or recent best-sellers.
4) Information on the era's top sheet music sellers is found in several historical reference sources, such as David Ewen's book All the Years of American Popular Music.
5) Author Roger Kinkle provided lists of top records and songs year by year in his book Complete Encyclopedia of Popular Music and Jazz, 1900-1950.
6) Joseph Murrells' book Million Selling Records from the 1900s to the 1980s included hits from this decade.

Weekly charts compiled for Pop Memories consisted of only a Top Five during the 1900-1904 period because of limited information available for these years. The launch of Talking Machine World in 1905 expanded this information, and the charts grew to a Top Ten.

For example, Len Spencer's "Arkansaw Traveler" (1902) and Arthur Collins' "The Preacher and the Bear" (1905) were cited as massive hits by each of the six sources above (retroactively, in the case of Talking Machine World), leaving no doubt that these were long-running #1 hits. The best-seller status of Billy Murray's "The Grand Old Rag" (1906), Byron G. Harlan's "School Days" (1907), and the Haydn Quartet's "Put On Your Old Gray Bonnet" (1909) was confirmed by five of the six sources; it is beyond question that these were enduring #1 smashes as well. Records that were cited by fewer sources, and with a lower degree of strength or confidence, appeared in Pop Memories as chart hits of a lower order.

How the charts were compiled, 1910-1919:

1) Talking Machine World published monthly lists of the best-selling records as provided by the major record companies from 1914-1921. While not always reliable, these were the most direct contemporary sources of data available up to this time, when taken in combination with the other sources listed.
2) Billboard published regular sheet music charts for a brief period in 1913, then offered weekly lists of the most popular songs in vaudeville from 1913-1918.
3) The American Society of Composers, Authors and Publishers (ASCAP), formed in 1914, years later (such as upon its 50th anniversary) published select lists of the most popular songs in its history by ASCAP songwriters.
4) Additional information on top sheet music sellers from Ewen and other reference sources.

5) Roger Kinkle's year-by-year lists of top records and songs.
6) Jim Walsh's commentaries on the pioneer era's top hit records remained a relevant factor for this decade.
7) Record label publications led by Victor, Columbia and Edison.
8) Murrells listed U.S. million sellers from 1910-1919.

Weekly charts held steady at a Top Ten during 1910-1919 as sources of information continued to expand. "Casey Jones" (1910) by Billy Murray & the American Quartet and such other top hits as "Alexander's Ragtime Band" (1911) by Arthur Collins & Byron Harlan were cited as unquestioned smashes by nearly all of the eight sources, and most of the decade's other #1 successes were confirmed by at least four or five of the eight sources.

How the charts were compiled, 1920-1929:

1) The Talking Machine World monthly record-label best seller lists continued into 1921. Eight years later, in late 1929, Variety expanded upon these lists by publishing — in the form of actual rankings — the top sellers each month for the major labels. The Variety charts were the most authoritative data ever published up to this time.
2) Billboard and Variety, in their respective music industry news accounts, provided abundant information on the hit songs and records of the decade — not through charts (until 1929), but through news items and commentaries.
3) Joseph Murrells listed million-selling records during the 1920s.
4) Information on the decade's top hits from author David Ewen and other historical references.
5) Roger Kinkle's year-by-year lists of top records and songs.
6) ASCAP's all-time listing of most popular songs by its composers.
7) The Victor and Columbia catalogs continued to provide items regarding best-selling records.

Pop Memories weekly charts expanded to 15 by the mid-1920s, and to a Top 20 starting in 1927, as industry information became increasingly abundant.

How the charts were compiled, 1930-1939:

1) The weekly record-label, best-seller charts continued to run in Variety until 1935. Billboard picked up these charts from November 1935 until early 1938. Metronome carried the charts until the end of 1938, when they ceased to exist.
2) Billboard and Variety began publishing rankings of the top songs for radio airplay and sheet music sales by 1934.
3) Your Hit Parade launched its famous radio-broadcast song rankings in April 1935.
4) Billboard debuted its Music Box Machine "chart" of top juke box hits in 1938.
5) Million-selling records listed by Murrells.
6) ASCAP's all-time listings of most popular songs by its composers.
7) Roger Kinkle's year-by-year lists of top records and songs.
8) Information on the decade's top hits from author David Ewen and other historical references.

Pop Memories continued a single weekly Top 20 until 1934. In that year, two separate Top 20 charts began: one for best-selling records (based primarily on the record label charts and Murrells, as supplemented by other sources such as Kinkle and Ewen); and one for Your Hit Parade and radio airplay. The latter chart was based solely on radio airplay in 1934 and early 1935. Starting in April 1935, the Your Hit Parade and radio airplay rankings were weighed together for this chart — points were earned from the rankings on each weekly list, with the top point-getters then ranked in order for the combined chart. Billboard's unveiling of the Music Box Machines rankings in 1938 created a third separate chart (ranging from 15 to 30 records per week) used for Pop Memories.

RESEARCHING BILLBOARD'S POP SINGLES CHARTS 1940-1999

From 1940 through 1999, all chart data is compiled exclusively from the following B*illboard* pop singles charts: Record Buying Guide, Best Sellers, Juke Box, Disk Jockey, Top 100, and Hot 100. If a song hit more than one of the multiple pop charts that Billboard published from 1944-1958, we show the peak position and peak date from the chart on which it attained its highest position and total weeks; if such a song reached the same peak position on more than one chart, the peak date is the earliest of its peak dates. The multiple charts reported on various aspects of song popularity. Billboard combined the factors of radio airplay and singles sales on their all-encompassing Hot 100 pop singles chart. Since its debut on August 4, 1958, the Hot 100 has remained the premier measure of song popularity throughout the remainder of the 20th century,

Following is a breakdown of the sizes and dates researched for each chart. Unless otherwise asterisked, each chart was researched from its debut until its end.

Chart Title	Dates Researched	# of Positions
Record Buying Guide	*1/6/40 * - 7/20/40 	10
Best Sellers	7/27/40 - 10/13/58	10-50
Juke Box *	1/8/44 - 6/17/57	15-30
Disc Jockey	1/27/45 - 7/28/58	15-30
Top 100	11/12/55 - 7/28/58	100
Hot 100	*8/4/58 - 12/4/99 	100

The complete history of all of the above charts and our precise research methods are extensively described in Joel Whitburn's unabridged pop singles books: Pop Hits 1940-1954 and Top Pop Singles 1955-1996.

* Billboard introduced the Record Buying Guide on February 19, 1938, in the Coin Operators section, as "a value to phonograph operators" (juke box dealers). As the first official juke box chart, it combined all versions of a hit title into one listing at an unnumbered position. In order to compile a Top 10 chart, we sequentially numbered the songs, according to the chart's top-to-bottom listing. The artist listed first in the song analysis is the artist credited for the hit in this book. We did not continue the research of the Record Buying Guide, until it evolved into the Juke Box chart in 1944, because the more definitive national Best Sellers chart was introduced on July 27, 1940.

 12/4/99 is the research cut-off date — includes all titles that peaked as of this date.

YEAR-BY-YEAR SECTION

This section lists the Top 40 hits of each year of the 20th century. Preceding each of the 20th century's 10 decades is an essay that touches on the era's news and popular music industry. The music essays of the earlier decades are the longest as once common, now faded terms like Tin Pan Alley and vaudeville required explanation. Our intention for these essays is to lend a brief, historical context to America's favorite songs; it is not to report on the many significant events and musical happenings of each decade. We hope that they will encourage you to explore the 20th century's rich musical legacy and history in other books that delve into these subjects.

The following ranking system determined the order of the Top 40 hits:

1) The title's peak position

   All titles peaking at #1 are listed first, then titles that peaked at #2 are grouped together and shown second, then the #3's, etc.

2) Ties among each highest position grouping are broken in the following order:
   a) Total weeks title held its peak position
   b) Total weeks charted in Top 3 (1900-1929)
   c) Total weeks charted in Top 5 (1910-1954)
   d) Total weeks charted in Top 10 (1930-1999)
   e) Total weeks charted in Top 40 (1955-1999)
   f) Total weeks charted

If there are still ties among titles, a computerized inverse point system is used to calculate a point total for each hit based on its weekly chart positions. If a title hit more than one pop chart from 1944-1958, its point total was calculated from the chart on which the title reached its peak position. If a title achieved its peak position on more than one of the multiple charts, then the most weeks at the peak position determined the chart from which its point total was calculated. If the number of weeks at the peak position was tied, the highest number of weeks on the chart determined from which chart the title's point total was calculated. If there was still a tie, the chart was chosen according to the following hierarchy: Hot 100/Top 100, Best Sellers, Disc Jockey and Juke Box.

EXPLANATION OF COLUMNAR HEADINGS

PEAK POSITION: Highest charted position (highlighted in bold type)

PEAK DATE: Date title reached its peak position

WEEKS:
- CH - Total weeks charted
- T3 - Total weeks charted in the Top 3 (1900-1929)
- T5 - Total weeks charted in the Top 5 (1910-1954)
- T10 - Total weeks charted in the Top 10 (1930-1999)
- T40 - Total weeks charted in the Top 40 (1955-1999)
- PK - Total weeks title held its peak position

RNK: Final ranking for the year

GLD:
- ● Gold single*
- ▲ Platinum single* (additional million units sold are indicated by a numeral following the symbol)

SYMBOL:

C - Comedy	N - Novelty
F - Foreign language	S - Spoken
I - Instrumental	X - Christmas

LABEL & NUMBER: Original record label and number of single when charted. For the four songs not released as singles in 1999, "LP Cut" is shown in the label column (ex: Atlantic LP Cut).

*The primary source used to determine gold and platinum singles is the Recording Industry Association of America (RIAA), which began certifying gold singles in 1958 and platinum singles in 1976. From 1958 through 1988, RIAA required sales of one million units for a gold single and two million units for a platinum single; however, as of January 1, 1989, RIAA lowered the certification requirements for gold singles to sales of 500,000 units and for platinum to one million units. Please keep in mind that some record labels have never requested RIAA certifications for their hits. In order to fill in the gaps, especially during the period prior to 1958, various other trade publications and reports were used to supplement RIAA's certifications.

A New Era For Popular Music

It was the age of Teddy Roosevelt, the Wright Brothers, the Ford Model T, powerful financier and monopolist J.P. Morgan, and the San Francisco earthquake. The urbanization of America was continuing, intensified by the vast wave of immigration that began in the 1880s and reached an all-time peak in this decade. And the same themes of bold innovation and expanding opportunity made the first years of the new century a uniquely exciting era for popular music and the recording industry.

In the early 1890s, the phonograph, just a few short years after its invention by Thomas Alva Edison in 1877, was still a relative novelty in the home, aside from well-to-do-families. Coin-in-the-slot phonographs (the precursor to the jukebox) — enabling customers to order a musical selection for a nickel and listen to it through a tube in hotel lobbies, saloons, and phonograph parlors — substantially expanded the audience for recordings by mid-decade. The introduction of the Edison Standard Phonograph in 1898, priced at $20, helped accelerate the process, so that within just a few years, the big tin horn of the classic gramophone was becoming a familiar sight in homes.

Discs Vs. Cylinders

In the music world, the key issue during the first decade of the new century was the battle of "discs vs. cylinders." Virtually all popular recordings were issued on vertical-cut brown wax cylinders until Emile Berliner's Berliner Gramophone Company was founded in the fall of 1895 to market flat discs in which recorded sound cut lateral grooves onto wax-coated zinc discs. Despite acclaim for the quality of Berliner discs, cylinders accounted for about two-thirds of all record sales in 1900; the nation's major music stores sold primarily cylinder phonographs, leaving the sale of disc gramophone talking machines largely to bicycle dealers and other small shops. But the tide would soon turn.

Although the Edison Talking Machine Company symbolized the industry to most Americans, thanks to the iconic status of its founder, its sales of solid-wax cylinder recordings were actually surpassed by one rival, Columbia. The Columbia Phonograph Company, founded in 1889 as a territorial franchise, had established itself as the pre-eminent industry giant, and by 1901 it also began issuing flat-disc recordings.

The landscape underwent a seismic shift with the founding in 1901 of the Victor Talking Machine Company by Eldridge Johnson and Emile Berliner (whose own company had gone out of business a year earlier). Victor sold only lateral-cut discs, and within a short time its combination of superior sound quality, a topflight roster of recording artists, and the most aggressive advertising the industry had yet seen, sent its sales hurtling past its rivals. Scrambling to avoid being left in the dust, Edison, in January 1902, began producing moulded metallic wax cylinders which could be produced in vastly greater quantities than the old brown wax cylinders. But even this improvement could not match the relative ease with which discs could be mass produced.

In 1903, Victor introduced 12-inch discs with a playing time of three and a half minutes, compared with two minutes for cylinders and two to three minutes for 8- and 10-inch discs. When Victor signed the world's most renowned operatic tenor, Enrico Caruso, to an exclusive contract in 1904, the sensation generated by his recordings (and Victor's highly prestigious line of Red Seal classical recordings) helped make it the undisputed industry leader.

Victor's position was solidified in 1906 by the introduction of the Victrola, the first record player to remove the increasingly intrusive tin horn from atop the phonograph and fold it into the wooden cabinet beneath. It would take a few years — concealed-horn phonographs went from three percent of total sales in 1907 to 75 percent in 1911 — but the word "Victrola" would become synonymous in many households with the word "phonograph." By 1908, the phonograph had firmly established its place in the typical American home.

Columbia soon responded with its own innovation in October 1908: the two-sided record. With every passing year the company had focused more on production of discs than on cylinders, and this trend was accelerated by the bold step of "two songs for the price of one." Within a few months, Victor also began issuing double-sided records.

Edison continued to rule in rural America, a domain that was shrinking each year. Its November 1908 debut of four-minute Amberol cylinders was an important step forward, as was its 1909 introduction of the acclaimed "Amberola 1" phonograph; but at decade's end, Edison was a fast-fading #3 in the industry its creator had founded.

Tin Pan Alley And Vaudeville

As the story goes, Monroe Rosenfeld, a reporter for the New York Herald, visited Harry von Tilzer's song-publishing business while researching an article on the growing beehive of songwriting activity along 28th Street in New York City. Noting the tinny sound that von Tilzer created by winding strips of paper through the piano strings, Rosenfeld titled his article Tin Pan Alley. Although it is disputed as to whether Rosenfeld or von Tilzer coined the term, Tin Pan Alley was synonymous with popular music in the early decades of the 20th century.

During the 1900s, Tin Pan Alley tunesmiths turned out nearly 100 songs that sold more than a million copies of sheet music. As would be the case until the 1920s, sheet music sales would generally be a more significant indicator of song popularity than record sales; nearly every department store and five & dime, in addition to music shops, sold sheet music to the day's top hits. Annual sheet music sales were approaching 30 million by decade's end. A driving force behind these sales was the ubiquity of pianos in middle- and upper-class American homes.

The foremost vehicle for distribution of Tin Pan Alley's hottest songs was vaudeville — live stage shows which brought family-oriented music, comedy, and variety acts to thousands of communities. Its peak of popularity was still to come. The early 1900s also brought the first full flowering of vaudeville's naughtier cousin, burlesque, although this was less significant for introduction of new popular songs.

The ascent of Broadway musicals was symbolized during this decade by the buoyantly energetic productions written by, and starring, George M. Cohan, starting with Little Johnny Jones in 1904. Victor Herbert's operettas were at their peak of popularity. Also, Florenz Ziegfeld staged his first Follies extravaganza in 1907.

The Hits Of 1900-1909

Several musical categories dominated the hit records of 1900-1909:

Male quartets: The sweet four-part barbershop harmonies of "Sweet Adeline" perhaps symbolize the decade more than any other sound, and male quartets were a constant presence on the era's best-seller lists. Victor had the Haydn Quartet, led by Harry MacDonough, but sometimes guest-starring his fellow tenor Billy Murray; the group had classic recordings not only of "Adeline" (1904) but of such enduring standards as "In the Good Old Summer Time" (1903) and "Take Me Out to the Ball Game" (1908). Columbia's entry was the Peerless Quartet, fronted first by bass singer Frank Stanley and then by tenor Henry Burr.

Parlor ballads: All those millions in sheet music sales were dominated by sentimental ballads that could be sung in the parlor at home around the family piano. Tenor Harry MacDonough was the decade's leading balladeer with such songs as "In the Sweet Bye & Bye" (1903) and "Shine On, Harvest Moon" (1909). Henry Burr would in time become an even more prolific king of ballads in his solo recordings, including "In the Shade of the Old Apple Tree" (1905) and "I Wonder Who's Kissing Her Now" (1909). Byron Harlan's "School Days" (1907), one of the decade's giant hits, also exemplified this musical style.

Minstrel songs: The origins of the minstrel tradition date back to slavery when white entertainers imitated the performances that slaves put on for plantation owners. Minstrel troupes, made up of African-Americans (largely after Emancipation in 1864) or those of whites who "blacked-up" their faces with burnt cork, were still enormously popular in the new century. The first record that could truly be called a popular phenomenon was "Arkansaw Traveler" by Len Spencer in 1902, a minstrel-style comedy routine accompanied by an energetic fiddler. Similar in style — and an even bigger seller — was Arthur Collins' "The Preacher and the Bear" in 1905. Minstrelry also encompassed the largely-spoken comedy songs of the first great African-American recording artist, Bert Williams, including his 1906 classic "Nobody."

Ragtime and syncopated songs: True ragtime, as symbolized by composer Scott Joplin, was seldom represented among the decade's best-selling records; one notable exception was banjo wizard Vess Ossman's 1907 recording of Joplin's "Maple Leaf Rag" — a historic precursor to the jazz recordings of a decade later. However, the infectious syncopated rhythms of ragtime inspired many of the era's major hits. These included Arthur Collins' "Bill Bailey, Won't You Please Come Home?" (1902) and many of the duo recordings of Collins & Byron Harlan.

George M. Cohan and Billy Murray: Cohan was the decade's most popular composer, and his supreme interpreter on record was Billy Murray. After scoring a 1905 smash with Cohan's "Yankee Doodle Boy," a year later Murray's light, breezy tenor helped make "The Grand Old Rag" (later known as "You're a Grand Old Flag") Victor's biggest seller of the decade. The performer also helped create a new category of popular hits, the "conversational duet," with his ideal musical partner Ada Jones; their warm, romantic and humorous partnerships on such records as "Cuddle Up a Little Closer, Lovey Mine" (1908) and (once again) "Shine On, Harvest Moon" (1909) made them beloved to millions.

Topical songs: The 1900-1909 decade was particularly rich with songs that directly reflected the events of the day, and again Billy Murray was the central figure. The Louisiana Purchase Exposition of 1904 in St. Louis was the most lavish fair of the era, and Murray celebrated it in "Meet Me In St. Louis, Louis." The Wright brothers' historic December 1903 flight at Kitty Hawk was soon followed by Murray's smash 1905 recording of "Come Take a Trip in My Air-Ship." The first transcontinental automobile race garnered world attention in 1903, and led to yet another subsequent Murray hit, "In My Merry Oldsmobile" (also 1905).

Comedy: Spoken-word comedy routines had been a staple of popular records ever since the birth of the industry, and remained so in 1900-1909. The most important performer in this category was Cal Stewart, whose vast array of recordings in the persona of "Uncle Josh" — a New England country bumpkin who often proved to be more clever than the sophisticated city folk he encountered on record — are wonderfully revealing of rural American lifestyles and philosophies during the era. The aforementioned Len Spencer also offered up a wide array of recorded comedy routines in different ethnic roles.

Brass bands: The very first important popular records back in 1890 were by the United States Marine Band ("The President's Own"). Its former leader John Philip Sousa, the "March King," had numerous early-1900s hits with his own band, as did Sousa's former associate Arthur Pryor. For collectors, one of the particular pleasures of the early 1900s is that most popular artists recorded for a wide variety of labels. For example, Murray's "Grand Old Rag" was rendered for Victor, Columbia, Edison, Zon-o-Phone, and International; Collins' "Preacher and the Bear" was available on the first four of those labels plus Indestructable and U.S. Everlasting. This free-lancing became less frequent during the World War I era, when top artists were usually signed to one company, or had exclusive disc contracts with either Victor or Columbia while still recording cylinders for Edison. However, non-exclusivity would emerge again — with a vengeance — after the war.

By decade's end, it was clear that the era of the cylinder was drawing to a close. Some 27.5 million recordings were sold in 1909, and — in sharp contrast to just several years earlier — the overwhelming majority were discs. Still more dramatic changes would soon be at hand in the years to come.

War, Revolution & New Forces in Popular Music

War was the dominant theme of the century's second decade. The June 1914 assassination of Archduke Ferdinand in Sarajevo set into motion a conflagration that engulfed most of Europe. After Germany declared unrestricted submarine warfare, the United States could no longer maintain its neutrality and entered the conflict in April 1917. By the time the Armistice was signed ending hostilities in November 1918, more than ten million lives had been lost. A new international concern was the Bolshevik revolution in Russia bringing an end to czarist rule in 1917.

The loss of 1,600 lives on the "unsinkable" Titanic stunned the world in 1912. In the entertainment field, the still-young motion picture industry entered a new era with D.W. Griffith's controversial 1915 classic The Birth Of A Nation. Jim Thorpe, the decade's greatest athlete, was stripped of his gold medals at the 1912 Olympics because he had played professional baseball. Jack Johnson, the first African-American heavyweight boxing champion, lost his title in 1915 to Jess Willard. Baseball was rocked by the "Black Sox" gambling scandal at the 1919 World Series.

Discs Rule The Music World

By 1910, discs had assumed full dominance of the popular record market over wax cylinders, with an advantage that expanded every year. In July 1912 Columbia stopped all production of cylinders, leaving Edison as the only major company still producing the recording format that had ruled the industry only a decade earlier. Recognizing that well over a million cylinder phonographs were still in homes, Edison introduced the unbreakable four-minute Blue Amberol cylinders in late 1912 (replacing the old wax cylinders), and would continue to produce cylinders for its predominantly rural (and especially Southern) market until the company left the recording business entirely in 1929. But the disc vs. cylinder battle was now effectively over.

Edison, determined to prove that his pioneering company was not a relic of the past, entered the disc market for the first time in 1913 by introducing the Edison Diamond Disc Phonograph and records. Their sound quality was hailed as the finest ever heard to this date, but because the phonograph would play only "hill-and-dale" vertically-grooved records, and not the laterally-cut discs made by Victor and Columbia, their popular impact would be limited.

Sheet music sales achieved an all-time high in 1910, with published estimates ranging from 30 million to substantially more. Two six-million sellers were "Let Me Call You Sweetheart" and "Down By The Old Mill Stream."

Ballroom dancing, symbolized by the team of Vernon & Irene Castle, became a nationwide phenomenon this decade, with 1913 as its peak year. This was also the year that the era's biggest dance craze, the fox-trot, was introduced. The tango spread from South America to Europe and the U.S., and other new steps like the turkey trot kept the dance floors red-hot. Record company profits soared as they scrambled to produce dance-band records for the surging new market.

Vaudeville was entertaining more and more Americans with musical, comedy, and variety acts throughout the decade, and by 1918 more than 25,000 performers were plying their trade in some 4,000 theaters nationwide. Such enduring hits as "Alexander's Ragtime Band" and "The Darktown Strutters' Ball" were launched toward hit status on the vaudeville circuit. On Broadway, composers Jerome Kern and Irving Berlin churned out a string of musical successes. The most sensational new star of the musical stage was Al Jolson, whose dynamic performances packed them in at New York's Winter Garden.

The blues had been performed in the African-American community for years, rooted in spirituals and traditional African chants, but it took W.C. Handy to introduce them to the rest of America. Classics such as "The Memphis Blues" (1912), "St. Louis Blues" (1914), and "Beale Street Blues" (1916) would in subsequent years help make the blues the foundation upon which a dazzling array of both African-American and white musical styles would be created.

Jazz, originally forged as a musical merging of the traditional brass band sound, African-derived rhythms, ragtime, and the blues, had been stirring since the 1890s as a bold new native folk music in New Orleans. But although a few artists such as banjo master Vess Ossman had cut records which hinted at jazz influences, the first commercial jazz recording took place on January 30, 1917, when the Original Dixieland Jazz Band waxed "Darktown Strutters' Ball." By decade's end, jazz was exerting a powerful influence on dance bands and other recording artists nationwide.

Every era has its musical fad, and this decade it was the Hawaiian song craze. Weary of war in Europe, record buyers found an escape to carefree exotic isles through such hits as "Hello, Hawaii, How Are You?" and "Oh, How She Could Yacki Hacki Wicki Wachi Woo" (both 1916).

The "Big Three" Monopoly Begins To Crack

Ever since the founding of the Victor Talking Machine Company in 1901, three companies — Edison, Columbia, and Victor — had almost completely dominated record sales in America. One of the sources of this dominance was a December 1903 cross-licensing agreement between Victor and Columbia under which the two companies shared their respective patents over laterally-cut discs. Other companies were free to produce vertically-cut discs, but because these discs wouldn't play on the phonographs owned by most consumers, their market share was miniscule. That all began to change in 1914.

As the exclusive patent rights held by Victor and Columbia began to expire, other companies made their move. Six new companies became talking-machine competitors to the Big Three in 1914, joined by 18 newcomers in 1915 and 46 more the following year. The Starr Piano Co. began issuing vertically cut Gennett discs, and survived a long court challenge. By 1919 Okeh and Vocalion also switched over to the most popular record format, with more competitors joining the fray in 1920. Although Victor and Columbia remained the industry's two giants, the choices open to both consumers and recording artists were suddenly more wide open than ever before.

Thanks in part to the ballroom dancing craze, phonograph and record sales had been rising rapidly throughout the war in Europe, and the war's end removed nearly all remaining barriers. In 1919 nearly 200 U.S. manufacturers produced more than two million phonographs, compared to the 1914 figures of 18 manufacturers and 500,000 phonographs.

The Hit Artists And Records Of 1910-1919

One of America's all-time top recording artists was Billy Murray. As a solo artist he scored with such hits as Irving Berlin's "I Love a Piano" (1916) and "Pretty Baby" (1917). His warm, charming duets with longtime partner Ada Jones, such as 1912's "Be My Little Baby Bumble Bee," continued to delight. But Murray's greatest success this decade came as the tenor lead voice of the American Quartet. The group's 1910 performance of the timeless "Casey Jones" became one of the biggest sellers of the entire acoustic recording era, and they followed with such immortal singles as "Come, Josephine, In My Flying Machine" (1911, with Ada Jones), the wartime classic "It's a Long, Long Way to Tipperary" (1914), and — continuing Murray's status as the supreme interpreter of George M. Cohan — "Over There" in 1917.

As the barber-shop harmonies of the century's opening decade remained enormously popular, other male quartets also rode high in record sales. The Peerless Quartet, led by Henry Burr, had a long succession of hits throughout the decade including "Let Me Call You Sweetheart" (1911) and — before the U.S. entered the war — "I Didn't Raise My Boy to Be a Soldier" (1915). The Haydn Quartet, fronted by Harry MacDonough, were also an important force with the 1910 smashes "Put On Your Old Gray Bonnet" and "By the Light of the Silvery Moon" (joined on the latter song by the ubiquitous Billy Murray).

The syncopated rhythms of ragtime were bigger than ever this decade, and no recording artists employed them more successfully than the team of Arthur Collins & Byron Harlan, particularly on their definitive renditions of two Irving Berlin standards, "Alexander's Ragtime Band" (1911) and "When the Midnight Choo Choo Leaves for Alabam'" (1913).

There was always a place in the record market for sentimental ballads, and tenor Henry Burr had a seemingly unending stream of ballad successes during the decade, such as Berlin's "When I Lost You" (1913), the tearjerker "M-O-T-H-E-R (A Word That Means the World to Me)" (1916), and "Beautiful Ohio" (1919). Burr also teamed with Albert Campbell (a fellow member of the Peerless Quartet) on numerous hits, including "Till We Meet Again" (1919). Harry MacDonough was the other king of the ballad singers, including "Down By the Old Mill Stream" (1911) and Jerome Kern's "They Didn't Believe Me" (1915, with Olive Kline).

Acoustic recording was far better suited to singers than to bands, but by the war years the technology had improved sufficiently that band recordings were more musically satisfying than ever before. The most prolific band in the record market was Prince's Orchestra led by Charles A. Prince (whose ensemble also backed most Columbia vocalists), which not only supplied ballroom dancers with such tracks as "Ballin' the Jack" (1914), but also —that same year— made the first commercial recording of a blues song with W.C. Handy's "Memphis Blues."

As the decade ended on the eve of Prohibition, the record industry was poised to enter a decade of even more tumultuous change.

Recordings Go Electric — And Then The Crash

America went dry on January 16, 1920, with the effective date of the Volstead Act barring beer, wine and liquor — except (as it turned out) from speakeasies and bootleggers. Also in 1920, women finally won the right to vote following ratification of the 19th Amendment to the Constitution. The discovery of King Tut's tomb in 1922 opened up new realms of the ancient world. After the sudden death of President Warren Harding in 1923, Calvin Coolidge moved into the Oval Office, and presided over the decade's economic prosperity. Charles A. Lindbergh captivated the world with the first solo non-stop flight across the Atlantic in 1927. But the good times came screeching to a halt with Black Thursday, the stock market crash of October 24, 1929.

The "Jazz Age" was symbolized in literature by F. Scott Fitzgerald, and on the silver screen by "flapper" queen Clara Bow, the sexy, carefree "It" girl. The silent cinema was transformed by the immediate success of the first widely-seen "talkie," The Jazz Singer starring Al Jolson in late 1927. Dance music was bigger than ever this decade, particularly when the Charleston swept the country in 1925. Communities all over the country held dance marathons which sometimes ran 50 hours or more.

In sports, the baseball world's shock over the 1919 "Black Sox" scandal was wiped away by the home run heroics of Babe Ruth and his New York Yankees dynasty. Heavyweight boxing champions Jack Dempsey and Gene Tunney, football's Red Grange, tennis champ Bill Tilden, and golf's Bobby Jones made it an era of sports legends.

For popular music, the most historic event of the 1920s was the switch from acoustic to electrical recordings, which followed a year of experiments by engineers at Bell Laboratories in 1924-25. Instead of the acoustic process of singers and musicians performing directly into a recording horn, they were now able to record with a condenser microphone in a spacious studio. With the use of a vacuum tube amplifier and an electromagnetically-powered cutting stylus, the frequency range of recorded music expanded by two and a half octaves. The Associated Glee Clubs of America's pairing of "Adeste Fideles" and "John Peel" became the first electrically-recorded hit in July 1925, and within months every major record label had gone electric.

Radio evolved swiftly from a novelty into a nationwide phenomenon in 1921, with some 500 stations established by 1922 and over 1,000 three years later. Broadcasts of dance bands became a mainstay of the new medium, and singers such as Billy Jones & Ernest Hare and Vaughn DeLeath became stars primarily through their radio programs. NBC Radio went on the air in late 1926, followed in 1927 by CBS.

The record industry was on a roller-coaster ride throughout the decade. Sales were booming in 1920-21 with postwar enthusiasm, but by 1924 had plunged alarmingly. Consumers were buying radios — offering far better sound quality than any acoustic phonograph — instead of phonographs and records. Burdened by a large inventory of unsold phonographs, Columbia Records went into receivership before reorganization in 1924, and then re-established itself as second only to mighty Victor among the major labels. Excitement over electrical recordings, coupled with the roaring national economic good times at mid-decade, reversed the downturn, and in 1927 record sales reached a peak of 140 million — until the onset of darkness two years later.

Broadway musicals were ushered into a new era in which mere spectacle was replaced by powerful story lines with the Jerome Kern-Oscar Hammerstein II classic Show Boat (featuring the immortal "Ol' Man River"), which debuted in December 1927. The decade's second most enduring musical was Vincent Youmans' No, No, Nanette (1925), which introduced "Tea for Two" and "I Want to Be Happy." George & Ira Gershwin emerged as one of the most remarkable creative teams on Broadway with 1924's Lady, Be Good (featuring "Fascinating Rhythm") and 1926's Oh, Kay! (featuring "Someone To Watch Over Me").

Following the breakthrough of The Jazz Singer, Hollywood dove headlong into producing movie musicals. The first million-selling record from a sound motion picture was Jolson's "Sonny Boy" from The Singing Fool in 1928, and the following year "Broadway Melody" was the first of many "all talking, all singing, all dancing" movies.

Top Artists And Records Of The 1920s

Dance bands captured the lion's share of record sales through most of the 1920s. The undisputed king of dance bands was Paul Whiteman, starting with his 1920 two-million-seller "Whispering," followed by such massive hits as "Three O'Clock In the Morning" (1922) and "In a Little Spanish Town" (1927). Whiteman also introduced the world to George Gershwin's landmark "Rhapsody In Blue" in 1924, and later provided the first taste of stardom for Bing Crosby. The decade's other top dance bands on record included the orchestras of Ben Selvin (whose "Dardanella" in 1920 sold an amazing five million copies), Ted Lewis (best remembered for "When My Baby Smiles At Me," also in 1920), and Isham Jones, who introduced such standards as "It Had to Be You" (1924) and "I'll See You In My Dreams" (1925).

The two foremost solo recording stars of the 1920s could not have been more different. Al Jolson was a rip-roaring dynamo in live performance and later films, launching classic hits including Gershwin's "Swanee" (1920), "April Showers" (1922), and "California, Here I Come" (1924). Gene Austin was a soft-voiced "crooner" whose career horizons were expanded by the greater sensitivity of electrical recording; among his smash hits were "Yes Sir! That's My Baby" (1925), "Bye Bye, Blackbird" (1926), and above all "My Blue Heaven," which sold over five million copies in 1927-28.

Jazz exploded into a full-flown American art form during the 1920s, and no one was more responsible for this than Louis Armstrong, whose virtuosity on cornet and later on vocals revolutionized music after he came north to Chicago to join King Oliver's band in 1923. His historic "Hot Five" and "Hot Seven" recordings of 1925-28 were topped by the stunning "West End Blues" (1928). Jelly Roll Morton and Fletcher Henderson led two of the era's most exciting jazz bands, setting the stage for the great Duke Ellington who debuted at New York's Cotton Club and on record in 1927. Cornetist Bix Beiderbecke was the first indisputably great white jazz musician, exemplified by his 1927 performance of "Singin' the Blues" with Frankie Trumbauer's band.

"Crazy Blues" by Mamie Smith in 1920 became the first authentic blues recording, paving the way for "the Empress of the Blues," Bessie Smith. Bessie's 1923 recording of "Down Hearted Blues" helped pull Columbia Records out of bankruptcy, and her 1925 performance of "St. Louis Blues" accompanied by Louis Armstrong was a musical landmark. Ma Rainey was another of the decade's most important blues artists.

In 1923, "The Little Old Log Cabin In the Lane" by Fiddlin' John Carson served as the first genuine country music recording. By mid-decade nearly every major record label had jazz, blues (or "race") and "hillbilly" divisions, greatly enriching musical diversity. Vernon Dalhart's "The Prisoner's Song" was not quite a country record, but its record-shattering sales of some seven million copies (he recorded the song for Victor, Columbia, Edison, and a host of other labels) helped establish that folk-based music had enormous popular appeal. In 1928, country had its first two all-time great recording stars with Jimmie Rodgers and the Carter Family.

As the decade closed, industry giant Victor was acquired in March 1929 by the leader in the radio field, RCA. A few weeks after Black Thursday, Thomas Edison decided to leave the recording and phonograph business — 52 years after his invention of the phonograph, and four decades after the Edison Talking Machine Company helped launch the industry. The timing of his departure was perfect considering the hard times that lay just ahead.

Depression, Swing And World War

America and soon the world sank into the Great Depression entering the new decade, with a wave of bank failures in 1930 and soaring business failures and unemployment. By 1932, the nation's income had been cut in half. The response of voters was the election of Franklin D. Roosevelt, and during his first 100 days in the White House in 1933 he pushed his New Deal programs through Congress, restoring hope if not (at first) the economy. Prohibition was repealed in 1933, returning alcoholic beverages from the back rooms and bootleggers. That same year, the kidnapping and murder of Charles Lindbergh's baby shocked the nation. Social Security was enacted in 1935. Against the background of war in Europe, Orson Welles' 1938 Halloween radio broadcast of War of the Worlds panicked many listeners around the country.

Adolph Hitler's rise to power as Chancellor of Germany coincided with FDR's inauguration in 1933, and by 1936 Nazi forces had launched their European offensive by entering the demilitarized Rhineland. Italy's Fascist forces conquered Ethiopia that year, and the two nations joined with Japan to form the Axis alliance. The Nazis took over Austria in 1938, the same year that democracy was crushed in Spain. As Germany conquered Czechoslovakia and invaded Poland in 1939, Britain and France declared war on the surging adversary.

Despite the Depression, millions of Americans kept flowing through movie turnstiles. King Kong (1933) thrilled them; the musical partnership of Fred Astaire & Ginger Rogers in films like Top Hat (1935) offered delicious escape; Disney's Snow White And The Seven Dwarfs in late 1937 was the first classic full-length animated film; and two of Hollywood's greatest creations came in 1939 with Gone With The Wind and The Wizard Of Oz.

In sports, Jesse Owens' four gold medals at the 1936 Berlin Olympics infuriated Hitler. Lou Gehrig kept the New York Yankees atop the baseball world. Joe Louis avenged his only loss by knocking out Germany's Max Schmeling.

Mirroring the national economy, the record industry underwent an almost total collapse to the point of selling only six million discs in 1932 — compared to the peak of 140 million just five years earlier. The opportunity to hear all popular songs on the radio for free, and general disenchantment with "canned music," also contributed to the desperate slump. Following the end of Prohibition, the opening of thousands of bars and cocktail lounges — many equipped with juke boxes — created a significant new market for records. By 1936, the jukebox had become ubiquitous wherever people gathered to listen to music or dance, with some 225,000 in operation by 1939. Another critical boost came in September 1934 with the American debut of the European company Decca Records, which startled the industry with an energetic promotional campaign built around its stable of top stars (led by Bing Crosby) and its affordable 35-cent record prices. The radio debut of Your Hit Parade in April 1935 brought the hottest songs to a broad national audience each week.

The decisive impetus to the revival of the record industry came with the beginning of the "swing era" with the September 1935 engagement of Benny Goodman and his band at the Los Angeles Palomar ballroom. As jitterbugging became the new dance craze in 1937, and Goodman's historic January 1938 Carnegie Hall concert brought jazz to a new audience, swing helped carry popular music to new levels of excitement at decade's end.

The 1930s was a golden decade for Broadway musicals. No composers soared higher than George & Ira Gershwin, moving from 1930's Girl Crazy (with "I Got Rhythm") to the landmark 1935 operetta Porgy and Bess featuring the classic "Summertime." Richard Rodgers & Lorenz Hart were unstoppable with such successes as 1936's On Your Toes (introducing "There's a Small Hotel") and 1937's Babes In Arms (featuring "My Funny Valentine" and "Where or When"). Jerome Kern's top 1930s musical was Roberta in 1933, which offered the standards "Smoke Gets In Your Eyes" and "Yesterdays." Perhaps no Broadway tunesmith was hotter this decade than Cole Porter, as heard in 1932's Gay Divorce (with the enduring "Night and Day") and 1934's Anything Goes (including "I Get a Kick Out of You").

Hit Artists And Records Of The 1930s

Bing Crosby was the king of popular records during the 1930s following his departure from the Paul Whiteman band, with nearly 150 charted hits from 1931-39 alone. His commanding baritone ballad style carried such songs as "Just One More Chance" (1931), the Depression theme "Brother, Can You Spare a Dime?" (1932), and "Pennies from Heaven" (1936) to the top. Fred Astaire proved to be just as masterful on record as he was on screen; his most unforgettable hits included "Night and Day" (1932), Irving Berlin's "Cheek to Cheek" (1935), and Kern's "The Way You Look Tonight" (1936). Louis Armstrong — still unsurpassed as a trumpet virtuoso — earned a wide new audience with his pop vocals such as "All of Me" (1932). Billie Holiday reigned as the era's greatest jazz vocalist.

But bands — particularly swing bands — dominated the record charts during the 1930s. Goodman, the "King of Swing," scored with "Don't Be That Way" and "Sing, Sing, Sing (With a Swing)" (both 1938) and "And the Angels Sing" (1939). Fellow clarinetist Artie Shaw had one of the swing era's undisputed classics with his 1938 rendering of Cole Porter's "Begin the Beguine." Tommy Dorsey's many record successes included "Marie" (1937) and "Boogie Woogie" (1938). For jazz purists, no bands could surpass the remarkable ensembles of Duke Ellington (such as his 1931 recording of "Mood Indigo") and Count Basie (who had jitterbuggers rocking in 1937 with "One O'Clock Jump"). Fats Waller & His Rhythm offered a mixture of jazz and endearing humor. For contrast, the mellow sweet-band sounds of Guy Lombardo & His Royal Canadians were top sellers throughout the decade. The supreme record-seller was Glenn Miller & His Orchestra, whose late 1939 recording of "In the Mood" ruled the top of the charts the following year and came to symbolize the entire era.

Country music moved during the '30s from the traditional sounds of the Carter Family and Jimmie Rodgers to the jazz-inflected "Western swing" of Bob Wills & His Texas Playboys and the creation of bluegrass by Bill Monroe. Blues artists were perhaps more affected by hard economic times than anyone in the music business, but the all-too-brief recording career of Robert Johnson (1936-37) would influence generations of performers.

The musical glories of swing helped distract a still-isolationist America from the terrible violence across the sea — but not for long.

Emergence From War & Swing Turns To Sing

The Nazi war machine continued to roll across Europe in 1940, shocking the world by seizing Paris, while German planes launched a succession of blitzes on Britain. Americans' time of living in a bubble of tranquility from a world at war ended on December 7, 1941, with the Japanese attack on Pearl Harbor. Franklin Roosevelt and Winston Churchill kept up the Western world's flagging morale amidst fierce fighting, and in 1943 the tide began to turn as the Germans' offensive in Russia collapsed, and Mussolini was deposed in Italy. The Allied landing at Normandy on D-Day, June 6, 1944, led to the liberation of Paris. As the end of the Third Reich rapidly approached in 1945, Hitler committed suicide, and the world discovered the horrific Holocaust: six million Jewish deaths in Nazi concentration camps. Japan's effort to continue the war ended when President Harry Truman — taking office following Roosevelt's death — gave the order to drop atomic bombs on Hiroshima and Nagasaki in August 1945. World War II at last came to a triumphant end, but only after the loss of some 50 million lives.

Confronting the devastation of Europe, the United States launched the Marshall Plan of massive financial aid to rebuild the continent's postwar economies. Simultaneously the U.S. addressed the dangerous expansionism of its former Soviet ally, symbolized by the Soviet's blockade of Berlin in 1948 which was broken by massive Allied airlifts of food and supplies. Britain granted independence to India and Pakistan in 1947 amidst widespread bloodshed, and the state of Israel was established the following year.

Hollywood continued to provide Americans with an escape from the world's troubles. The decade's symbolic movie hero was Humphrey Bogart, above all in his immortal teaming with Ingrid Bergman in Casablanca (1942). Perhaps the greatest of all American movies was created by Orson Welles in his 1941 masterpiece Citizen Kane. Walt Disney delighted fans both young and old with the animated classics Fantasia, Bambi, and Pinocchio. Frank Capra's extraordinary It's a Wonderful Life (1946) with James Stewart would become a beloved favorite for future generations, and the same year featured the Oscar-winning tale of Americans returning home from war, The Best Years of Our Lives.

Commercial television got underway in 1941 on NBC and CBS, but it was largely a novelty until broadcasts of the 1947 World Series brought television its first mass audience. Regular network programming began in 1948, including the debuts of Milton Berle's Texaco Star Theater and Ed Sullivan's Toast of the Town.

Broadway's greatest musical of the decade came in 1943 with Rodgers & Hammerstein's precedent-shattering smash Oklahoma!, and it also served as the first major original-cast album. The prolific composing team would score an even more massive hit six years later with South Pacific, the longest-running #1 album in Billboard chart history at an astonishing 69 weeks. Irving Berlin (1946's Annie Get Your Gun) and Cole Porter (1948's Kiss Me, Kate) also scored giant musical successes.

Joe DiMaggio's status as an American icon was guaranteed by his record 56-game hitting streak in 1941, the same year that Ted Williams became the last man this century to hit .400. But the era's most important sports event occurred in 1947 when Jackie Robinson became the first African-American man to enter modern major league baseball with the Brooklyn Dodgers, en route to a Hall of Fame career. Joe Louis defended his heavyweight boxing title 25 times from 1937-48 before retiring (briefly). George Halas' Chicago Bears ruled pro football with four NFL titles this decade, including their 73-0 massacre of the Washington Redskins in 1940. Notre Dame won four national college football titles in the '40s.

The recording industry enjoyed booming success during the early 1940s, until the era's dominant big bands were stilled on August 1, 1942, when the American Federation of Musicians joined in a ban on recording due to a dispute over musicians' royalties. By the time all the record companies entered into an agreement to end the ban in late 1944, vocalists had assumed predominance over bands in popularity. A new era began in June 1948 when Columbia demonstrated the long-playing microgroove recording, playing at thirty-three and a third revolutions per minute, making possible long-playing albums that were ideal for classical and jazz artists. Shortly thereafter the RCA Victor label came out with its own innovation, the seven-inch 45 rpm record. After two years of confusion and competition, 45s would become the standard for single releases, and 78s were phased out by the late 1950s after a half-century of dominance.

Hit Artists And Records Of The 1940s

The early 1940s marked the glory days of the Swing Era led by the high-flying big bands of Duke Ellington, Glenn Miller, Benny Goodman, Count Basie, Jimmy and Tommy Dorsey, Artie Shaw, and Harry James, who kept Americans dancing even while war raged abroad. Miller's 1940 classic "In the Mood" served as perhaps the definitive Big Band anthem, perhaps rivaled only by Ellington's "Take the `A' Train." But the musicians' recording ban enabled singers to assume center stage; in December 1946, eight of the country's most popular bands broke up within just a few weeks.

Bing Crosby remained America's #1 singer, reaching a peak with his 30-million-selling standard "White Christmas" in 1942, and he consolidated that success by winning an Oscar for his starring role in Going My Way (1944). The Mills Brothers enjoyed the decade's biggest group vocal smash with "Paper Doll" in 1943, and the Andrews Sisters scored with a long string of hits. But no one left more fans swooning than Frank Sinatra; after leaving the Tommy Dorsey band, his November 1942 engagement at the Mosque Theater in Newark, New Jersey, marked the beginning of "Sinatra mania." Nat "King" Cole moved from his piano-based jazz stylings with the King Cole Trio to take a place among pop's foremost vocalists.

Jazz entered new postwar horizons with the radical "bebop" genius of Charlie Parker and Dizzy Gillespie. Louis Jordan became the first true rhythm & blues performer to achieve tremendous crossover chart success, helping to pave the way for rock 'n' roll. After Roy Acuff, Bill Monroe, and Bob Wills dominated most of country music's decade, Hank Williams emerged as country's first modern superstar. Wynonie Harris, a "blues shouter" from Nebraska, had a huge #1 R&B hit in 1948, which presaged the sea change ahead: "Good Rockin' Tonight."

Rockin' In A New Era

The June 1950 invasion of North Korean forces across the 38th Parallel into South Korea got the decade off to a tense beginning. After a strong response by American-led United Nations forces and China's surprise entry into the war, the conflict dragged on — with deaths totaling more than one million — until an armistice took effect in July 1953. Cold War tensions were further symbolized by the 1953 execution of Julius & Ethel Rosenberg for espionage. Sen. Joseph McCarthy's investigations of alleged Communists in U.S. government shattered many lives until the Senate officially condemned his practices. The Soviet's successful 1957 launch of Sputnik I as the first man-made satellite in Earth orbit brought a new urgency to America's space program.

The presidency of Dwight Eisenhower was highlighted by the beginning of the 41,000-mile Interstate Highway System that would transform American travel and living patterns. The "suburbanization" of America became a dominant force in the '50s, bolstered by an economy that expanded steadily until a decade-end recession. The Supreme Court's ruling in Brown v. Board of Education, setting aside the "separate but equal" doctrine in public education, bolstered a growing new civil rights movement. The 1957 entry of federal troops to enforce a court order to desegregate an Arkansas high school reflected the continuing racial divide.

Due to declining attendance and the soaring popularity of television, movie theater owners installed larger screens and better sound systems. As a result, such epics as The Ten Commandments (1956) and Ben-Hur (1959) dominated the decade's box office. Marilyn Monroe became Hollywood's love goddess with films like The Seven-Year Itch (1955), while a defiant new male image on screen was forged by Marlon Brando and James Dean.

The phenomenal popularity of I Love Lucy helped make television a fixture in nearly every American home. Milton Berle, Jackie Gleason, Sid Caesar's Your Show of Shows, and Gunsmoke also ruled the airwaves.

My Fair Lady (1956) and South Pacific (1959) gave Broadway its greatest musical successes of the era.

The New York Yankees ruled the baseball world with five straight World Series championships from 1949-53 and again in 1956 and 1958, although the decade's most memorable sports moment was Bobby Thompson's "shot heard 'round the world" home run which won the National League pennant for the New York Giants in 1951. Rocky Marciano retired as undefeated heavyweight champion in 1956.

Hit Artists And Records Of The 1950s

The mellow ballads of Nat "King" Cole, Eddie Fisher, Tony Bennett, Perry Como and Patti Page dominated the pop record charts of the early 1950s, but revolutionary change was on the way. It had been foreshadowed in the 1940s "jump blues" of Louis Jordan and the emotionally urgent postwar country sounds of Hank Williams, and by such scorching "race" record hits as "Rocket 88" (1951) by Jackie Brenston and his Delta Cats.

Rhythm & blues topped the pop charts in 1954 when The Crew-Cuts, a white Canadian quartet, hit #1 with "Sh-Boom," a song by the R&B group The Chords. The subsequent influx of R&B songs covered by white artists such as Pat Boone and Gale Storm, introduced R&B to the mass audience and left white teens hungry for more.

When a young man from Tupelo, Mississippi, named Elvis Presley cut his first Sun Records disc, "That's All Right," in July 1954, forging R&B and country into the new force of rock 'n' roll, the world would not be quite the same again. After Elvis' RCA Records debut in 1956 with "Heartbreak Hotel" and his first appearance on The Ed Sullivan Show, which was seen by an astounding 82 percent of the total television audience, he was the undisputed King of Rock 'n' Roll.

But rock had other royalty as it rapidly came to dominate pop music. Although the Crew Cuts' "Sh-Boom" had been the first rock-styled song to top the pop charts, Bill Haley & His Comets could claim the first indisputable rock 'n' roll song to hit #1, "Rock Around the Clock" (1955). Chuck Berry's combination of lyrical ingenuity with relentless drive (as in 1958's "Johnny B. Goode"); Little Richard's manic energy (heard in his 1956 breakthrough "Tutti-Frutti"); Jerry Lee Lewis' piano pyrotechnics (1957's "Whole Lot Of Shakin' Going On"); and Buddy Holly's infectious rockabilly (as in 1957's "That'll Be The Day") all forged their images into the rock pantheon. Fats Domino and The Everly Brothers showed rock's gentler side.

A local Philadelphia dance show, American Bandstand, began broadcasting nationally on August 5, 1957. The show's youthful host, Dick Clark, introduced American teens to a score of groundbreaking talents.

Even with the rise of rock 'n' roll, there was plenty of room in 1950s music for other sounds. Frank Sinatra enjoyed his finest decade with such classic albums as 1955's In the Wee Small Hours and 1958's Only the Lonely. Ella Fitzgerald established herself as the peerless female vocalist with her "songbook" celebrations of George Gershwin and Rodgers & Hart. Johnny Mathis proved that there was still a huge market for love songs with hits like "Chances Are" (1957). The jazz world's new king, Miles Davis, scored with timeless albums including Kind of Blue (1959); longtime legend Duke Ellington enjoyed a renaissance with his 1956 performance at Newport; and saxophone master John Coltrane dazzled jazz lovers with 1959's Giant Steps.

Folk music had experienced an early-1950s boom with the rise of The Weavers (whose "Goodnight Irene" was the #1 hit of 1950), but its record sales exploded like never before later in the decade thanks to Harry Belafonte (whose 1956 album Calypso was #1 for 31 weeks) and The Kingston Trio following their 1958 debut chart-topper "Tom Dooley." The death of Hank Williams deprived country music of its most electrifying star, but new greats would emerge with Johnny Cash and Patsy Cline.

The most important R&B star to emerge during the 1950s was "The Genius," Ray Charles, who would soon cross over to pop stardom with the 1959 smash "What'd I Say?" B.B. King established himself as "King of the Blues" with hits like "Every Day I Have the Blues" (1955), but had plenty of competition from Howlin' Wolf and Muddy Waters.

After years of experimentation, the first commercial stereo long-playing albums were issued in 1958, and early the following year Billboard began publishing separate stereo and "mono" album charts (until 1963). Records were sounding better than ever, but the frenetic excitement of the previous few years had diminished with Elvis Presley doing Army duty, the careers of other rock greats sidetracked by turbulent life changes, and the tragic death of rising star Buddy Holly. A new jolt of excitement was needed, and was just a few short years away.

From Exaltation To Tragedy, & Plenty Of Rock 'N' Roll

Musically, the 1960s was a decade that started slowly and began accelerating by quantum leaps into exciting new dimensions for rock lovers. Socially, it was a decade of domestic turbulence and trauma unlike any other in this century.

The 1960 election of John F. Kennedy brought a fresh breeze of youth and vigor into the White House. The anti-Fidel Castro Bay of Pigs invasion of Cuba in 1961 was a disaster, and the erection of the Berlin Wall that year became a new symbol of the Cold War. The world teetered on the brink of full-scale nuclear war with the Cuban missile crisis in October 1962, until Kennedy negotiated the Soviets' removal of the missiles. The great 1963 civil rights march on Washington, D.C. concluded with Dr. Martin Luther King's "I Have a Dream" speech, and helped lead to enactment of the Civil Rights Act and the Voting Rights Act the following two years. President Kennedy's assassination on November 22, 1963, left the world in mourning, and Lyndon Johnson in the Oval Office.

American soldiers entered combat in Vietnam in 1965, and by the end of 1968 U.S. troop levels there topped 500,000. Johnson's "Great Society" domestic programs soon took a back seat to the escalation of the war, stimulating a growing and fervent antiwar movement. Miniskirts and "flower power" represented a brief renewal of optimism in 1966-67 — and then America endured a grim 1968 with the assassinations of Dr. King and Senator Robert Kennedy. Richard Nixon won a narrow victory for the presidency in 1968. Anti-war and racial demonstrations increasingly turned violent in cities across the nation. On a far brighter note, the U.S. space program that had put its first astronaut in space in 1961 made Apollo 8 the first manned spacecraft to orbit the moon in 1968; Neil Armstrong became the first human to set foot on the moon the following summer.

Alfred Hitchcock's Psycho (1960), the classic 1962 pictures To Kill a Mockingbird and Lawrence of Arabia, the tragic death of Marilyn Monroe in 1962, and the wildly successful James Bond film series starting with 1962's Dr. No were among the key movie events during the first half of the decade. After the massive box office success of The Sound of Music (1965), the generation-defining The Graduate (1967), Stanley Kubrick's visionary 2001: A Space Odyssey (1968) and the counterculture epic Easy Rider (1969) set a new tone for the late '60s.

The television airwaves were ruled by sitcoms (The Andy Griffith Show, The Dick Van Dyke Show), the classic sci-fi/fantasy series The Twilight Zone and Star Trek, and Westerns. Johnny Carson reigned over the late-night scene on The Tonight Show.

On Broadway, the 1964 shows Fiddler On the Roof and Hello, Dolly! were the decade's longest-running musicals. The shocking success of 1968's Hair gave a new generation a musical to call its own.

Baseball saw a new single-season home run king with Roger Maris in 1961, a pitcher for the ages in Sandy Koufax, and the "Miracle Mets" of 1969. Vince Lombardi's Green Bay Packers, already winners of three previous NFL titles, triumphed in the first two Super Bowls in 1967-68, before Joe Namath took the New York Jets to a stunning victory the following year. Bill Russell's Boston Celtics won their 11th NBA championship in 13 years in 1969, while UCLA enjoyed similar supremacy in college basketball. Cassius Clay won the heavyweight championship from Sonny Liston, then as Muhammad Ali, he was stripped of his title for refusing induction into the army.

Hit Artists And Records Of The 1960s

Pop music mellowed with the infusion of strings (by The Drifters, Fats Domino, Bobby Vee and many other rock & roll artists) in the early 1960s, then was enlivened by the California harmonies of the Beach Boys and their New York counterparts, The Four Seasons. The growing folk music boom was led by Peter, Paul & Mary, The Kingston Trio, and Joan Baez. Young bard Bob Dylan's emergence in 1963 brought a remarkable new talent onto the scene, made even more indelible when he went "electric" with the classic 1965 hit "Like a Rolling Stone." Phil Spector's "Wall of Sound" was powerfully represented by The Righteous Brothers' "You've Lost That Lovin' Feeling." The Brill Building in New York City was a hit factory employing the songwriting teams of Gerry Goffin & Carole King, Jeff Barry & Cynthia Weil, and Howard Greenfield & Neil Sedaka; other top tunesmiths along rock 'n' roll's Tin Pan Alley included Jeff Barry & Ellie Greenwich, and Mort Pomus & Doc Shuman. The Ventures, Duane Eddy, Booker T. & The MG's, and Herb Alpert ensured that there was no shortage of instrumentals on the charts.

But above all this was the decade of The Beatles, who single-handedly brought back excitement to a world in shock from JFK's assassination. After dominating 1964 with a relentless outpouring of hits symbolized by their film A Hard Day's Night, the boys from Liverpool showed constant creative growth with the sophisticated balladry of "Yesterday," culminating in their 1967 magnum opus Sgt. Pepper's Lonely Hearts Club Band.

The British Invasion also swept such groups as The Rolling Stones and The Who onto the scene. The Byrds gave birth to folk-rock, Simon & Garfunkel gave pop some of its finest song-poetry, and The Monkees became the first TV-bred supergroup. Just when many thought he was a relic of history, Elvis Presley proved them wrong with his thrilling 1968 comeback concert on NBC. Jimi Hendrix provided rock with its ultimate guitar god, and his performance highlighted the epic Woodstock festival in 1969 before 400,000 fans. The Doors, Jefferson Airplane and Grateful Dead lent a new intensity to rock, while The Archies, Tommy Roe and 1910 Fruitgum Co. supplied bouncy bubblegum pop.

Rhythm & Blues went completely mainstream in the '60s thanks to the colossal success of Motown, led by the chart-topping Diana Ross & The Supremes, The Temptations, and The Four Tops. Ray Charles hit a new peak of popularity with his genre-hopping 1962 #1 "I Can't Stop Loving You." Aretha Franklin emerged as The Queen of Soul with smashes like 1967's "Respect." James Brown established himself as the most electrifying live performer in the music world. Otis Redding was soaring to the top before his tragic death in 1968.

Although country music lost one of its most beloved stars with the death of Patsy Cline in 1963, George Jones and Buck Owens provided a steady stream of memorable country chart-toppers, and Tammy Wynette became the new queen of country with 1968's "Stand By Your Man." Longtime great Johnny Cash was reaching his widest national audience ever by the late '60s, thanks in part to his massively successful live album recorded at San Quentin prison.

Frank Sinatra reasserted himself at the top of the pop charts, returning there in 1966 with "Strangers In the Night." Ageless Louis Armstrong scored one for the old-timers when his "Hello, Dolly!" nudged The Beatles out of the #1 spot in 1964. Barbra Streisand's 1964 smash "People" helped launch the career of a new legend. In jazz, Miles Davis continued to set the pace with his electric band of the late '60s, and jazzmen Dave Brubeck ("Take Five") and Stan Getz ("The Girl from Ipanema") crossed over to the pop charts.

By the end of the 1960s musical genres were being crossed at every turn — country merging with soul, folk with rock, and jazz with rock in the "fusion" sound. Free-form FM radio stations seemed to herald a new day of music without boundaries. However, some of those boundaries were to return in the '70s, along with some new challenges.

Decade Of Turbulence, Time Of Musical Transition

The social and political turbulence that had exposed divisions in America in the late 1960s came to a head in the early 1970s. Meanwhile, popular music's focus moved from the previous decade's socially-conscious rock and soul to the more self-directed realm of disco.

The killing of four students at a 1970 Kent State University antiwar protest symbolized the dominance of the Vietnam War in American political debates; this was followed by the 1971 dramas of the My Lai massacre court convictions and the publication of the Pentagon Papers, revealing the early history of U.S. involvement in Vietnam. During his re-election year of 1972, President Nixon made a historic visit to China. A cease-fire agreement took effect in Vietnam in early 1973, leading two years later to the surrender of Saigon to Communist forces. As revelations grew regarding White House-directed wiretapping, burglaries and cover-ups, Senate hearings on the scandal attracted huge TV audiences in 1973, and Nixon's firing of special Watergate prosecutor Archibald Cox created a political firestorm. After secret White House tapes revealed that Nixon had authorized the cover-up campaign, his support collapsed, and in August 1974 he became the first President to resign from office.

Gerald Ford — who had become Vice President following the resignation of Spiro Agnew after Agnew pleaded no contest to tax evasion charges — assumed the Presidency, and pardoned Nixon from any possible criminal charges. Ford was defeated by former Georgia governor Jimmy Carter in the 1976 presidential race. Carter achieved the Camp David peace accord between Israel and Egypt, but in 1979 his presidency was damaged when Iranian radicals seized 66 hostages at the U.S. embassy in Tehran.

Director Francis Ford Coppola dominated the Oscars with his epics The Godfather (1972) and The Godfather, Part 2 (1974). Steven Spielberg became Hollywood's hottest young director with the success of Jaws (1975) and Close Encounters of the Third Kind (1978). The decade's landmark movie proved to be George Lucas' box office phenomenon Star Wars (1977). Other key 1970s films included Lucas' American Graffiti (1973), Chinatown (1974), the Oscar-sweeping One Flew Over the Cuckoo's Nest (1975), Rocky and All the President's Men (both 1976), Woody Allen's Annie Hall, and Saturday Night Fever (both 1977).

The hard-hitting comedies All In The Family and *M*A*S*H* were among the most popular and socially relevant television series of the 1970s; other long-running hits included The Mary Tyler Moore Show, The Waltons, Happy Days, Charlie's Angels and Saturday Night Live. Roots, the 1977 Alex Haley novel-turned-miniseries, fascinated millions with its saga of an African slave and his descendants, and became the most-watched television series of all time

The kings of Broadway musicals during the '70s were Stephen Sondheim (including Follies in 1971 and A Little Night Music two years later), and Andrew Lloyd Webber, who followed the rock opera Jesus Christ, Superstar with the 1979 smash Evita. The decade's biggest musical of all was A Chorus Line (1975).

The National Football League took over as America's #1 sports attraction in the 1970s, symbolized by the success of ABC's Monday Night Football. Don Shula's Miami Dolphins achieved an undefeated season in 1973, and Terry Bradshaw led the Pittsburgh Steelers to four Super Bowl triumphs. In baseball, Hank Aaron shattered Babe Ruth's career home-run record, and Reggie Jackson powered the Oakland Athletics to three straight World Series wins (1972-74), then helped carry the New York Yankees to two more (1977-78). Muhammad Ali won two of his three epic battles with Joe Frazier, including 1975's "Thrilla in Manila," and scored a stunning knockout over George Foreman. Bjorn Borg won four of his five consecutive Wimbledon tennis crowns through 1979, while Jimmy Connors took three U.S. Open titles, but neither could top Billie Jean King's "Battle of the Sexes" triumph over Bobby Riggs for public impact. Kareem Abdul-Jabbar was pro basketball's man of the decade with six Most Valuable Player awards.

Hit Records And Artists Of The 1970s

A musical era ended in 1970 with the breakup of The Beatles, although John, Paul, George, and Ringo would go on to successful solo careers. The monumental success of "Bridge Over Troubled Water" in 1970 also ended the permanent partnership of Simon & Garfunkel, paving the way for Paul Simon's solo hits such as the 1975 album Still Crazy After All These Years. Carole King's massively popular 1971 LP Tapestry was a landmark for singer-songwriters, as was Bob Dylan's Blood On the Tracks in 1975. Stevie Wonder was the decade's most honored artist, collecting multiple Grammy Awards and chart smashes with albums including Innervisions (1973) and Songs In The Key Of Life (1976). Fleetwood Mac's Rumours (1977) was rock's biggest album of the decade.

Groups like Bread, America and the Carpenters led the charge of artists mellowing out the charts with soft rock. Carly Simon and James Taylor were the "first couple" of solo singer/songwriters. John Denver and Olivia Newton-John found huge crossover success on the pop and country charts. Elton John, The Eagles, Paul McCartney & Wings, the Doobie Brothers, Chicago and Peter Frampton packed stadiums. Led Zeppelin and Pink Floyd drew legions of fans with their heady, heavy rock, while The Allmann Brothers and Lynyrd Skynyrd were the top purveyors of southern rock.

Dance music had been scoring hits since the birth of recorded music, but the rise of disco starting in 1974 took it to such new heights of popularity that for a time it superceded rock 'n' roll. Pop tunesmiths the Bee Gees remade themselves into the lords of disco with the astonishingly successful and influential 1977 soundtrack to the film Saturday Night Fever featuring the anthem "Stayin' Alive;" and Donna Summer was the Queen of Disco with hits like "Hot Stuff." At decade's end, the anti-establishment sound of punk rock swept the British rock scene; although groups like the Sex Pistols had less success in the U.S., their influence would be felt in the following decades.

Traditional soul was still going strong in the early 1970s with timeless hits like The Jackson 5's "I'll Be There" (1970), Marvin Gaye's "What's Going On" (1971), The Temptations' "Papa Was A Rolling Stone" and Al Green's "Let's Stay Together" (both 1972), and the 1973 chart-topper "Midnight Train To Georgia" by Gladys Knight & the Pips. Country music enjoyed crossovers to pop success with Willie Nelson (1975's album Red Headed Stranger and the 1978 album Stardust), Dolly Parton, and Charlie Rich, but pure-country stars such as George Jones and Tammy Wynette were still scoring hits as well. Jazz was dominated by the trend toward rock-influenced fusion, led by Miles Davis and Chick Corea, along with new stars like The Manhattan Transfer and Al Jarreau.

The world was stunned by the untimely death of 42-year-old Elvis Presley in 1977; his popularity would go on to reach mythic proportions as millions of fans continued to make the pilgrimage to his gravesite at the Graceland mansion in Memphis.

High Times & A New Music Video Age

The election of Ronald Reagan as the 40th President in 1980 ushered in a new political era. Iran released 52 American hostages in January 1981, after 444 days in captivity. Reagan recovered from an assassination attempt in 1981 — the same year that also saw the assassination of Egyptian President Anwar Sadat, and an unsuccessful attempt on the life of Pope John Paul II. Reagan also survived the Iran-Contra scandal, with revelations that the U.S. traded arms for hostages, in his second term. A severe recession in 1981-82 was followed by a strong economic recovery that continued through most of the decade. Even a record stock market crash in October 1987 marked only a temporary interruption in the high times that made "yuppies" (young upwardly-mobile professionals) a symbol of the era. However, the rising economic tide was accompanied by a huge increase in the national debt, and violent crime rates soared. George Bush was elected President in 1988.

After taking office as Soviet leader in 1985, Mikhail Gorbachev began a process of political liberalization that, together with pressure from the West and escalating ethnic tensions, would soon lead to the breakup of the Soviet Union. The rapid collapse of Communist governments in Eastern Europe was symbolized by the October-November 1989 dismantling of the Berlin Wall.

The July 1981 wedding of Prince Charles to Lady Diana Spencer captured a worldwide television audience in the hundreds of millions. The 1985 death of Rock Hudson alerted Americans to the scourge of AIDS that would claim nearly 100,000 American lives by the end of the decade. The U.S. space shuttle Challenger exploded after takeoff in 1986, killing its seven astronauts.

Steven Spielberg's wondrous E.T., The Extra Terrestrial (1982) was the movie phenomenon of the decade. Action/fantasy movie franchises dominated the box office, such as the new Star Wars installments The Empire Strikes Back and Return Of The Jedi, the Harrison Ford adventure Raiders Of The Lost Ark (1981) and its two sequels, the three Back To The Future films, and Tim Burton's Batman (1989). But there was also room for the sweeping romance Out Of Africa (1985), Oliver Stone's Vietnam epic Platoon (1986), and the warm Kevin Costner baseball classic Field Of Dreams (1989).

On television, situation comedies made a strong comeback with the huge success of The Cosby Show and Cheers, while the campy prime-time soap operas Dallas and Dynasty won huge audiences. Hill Street Blues was TV's top drama of the decade, and The Wonder Years became an enduring favorite. American entertainment habits continued to be transformed by technology; by 1988 over half of all U.S. households subscribed to cable TV and had a videocassette recorder.

Broadway lit up with the long-running productions of Cats, Les Miserables and Phantom Of The Opera.

The NFL's team of the decade was the San Francisco 49ers, who won three Super Bowls (and a fourth in January 1990) led by quarterback Joe Montana. Joe Gibbs' Washington Redskins won the 1983 and 1988 Super Bowls. The Chicago Bears' Walter Payton broke Jim Brown's record for career rushing yards. Baseball's highlights of the decade were Pete Rose shattering Ty Cobb's record for career hits, and injured Kirk Gibson's dramatic game-winning home run in the 1988 World Series. Magic Johnson's Los Angeles Lakers won five NBA championships during the '80s, to three for Larry Bird and the Boston Celtics. Mike Tyson took over as heavyweight boxing champion in 1987, while welterweight Sugar Ray Leonard engaged in the era's most exciting fights. John McEnroe and Jimmy Connors battled for supremacy in men's tennis; Martina Navratilova and Chris Evert ruled the women's game until the emergence of Steffi Graf.

Hit Records And Artists Of The 1980s

One of the two most important musical events of the 1980s was the rise of music video led by MTV starting in 1981, which became so powerful that by mid-decade pop artists were all but defined by their videos. Equally momentous was the emergence of the compact disc. By 1987 CD sales soared by nearly 100 percent to exceed 100 million units, and the following year they surpassed vinyl album sales for the first time.

Michael Jackson's late-1982 album Thriller smashed all records with total sales of more than 25 million units, leading to his self-proclaimed King Of Pop title. Madonna was the era's foremost female icon with hits such as "Like A Virgin" and trend-setting styles. Bruce Springsteen hit new heights with his 1984 album Born In The U.S.A., rivaled among rock stars only by U2 (with 1987's The Joshua Tree). Whitney Houston became an instant pop-music goddess with her 1985 debut album. The all-star ensemble USA for Africa made history with the 1985 humanitarian single "We Are The World." Paul Simon's 1986 masterpiece Graceland set new standards for incorporating world-music influences.

The popularity of '70s rockers Aerosmith, Van Halen and Heart surged by mid-decade; newcomers Def Leppard and Bon Jovi set the stage for the boom in heavy-metal and hard-rock bands like Mötley Crüe, Whitesnake, Poison, and Guns N' Roses. Duran Duran, Eurythmics and Culture Club rode the British New Wave to the top of the American charts. The Cars, Talking Heads, The B-52's, R.E.M., The Police and The Pretenders went from New York's clubs, college-town bars and England's pubs to arena-filling tours. Youngsters New Edition, New Kids On The Block, Debbie Gibson and Tiffany found phenomenal success among the teeny boppers. The finely choreographed music videos of Janet Jackson, Milli Vanilli and Paula Abdul inspired a resurgence in dance music.

Boosted by the hugely popular Purple Rain soundtrack, Prince was the 1980s' #1 R&B star, followed by Michael Jackson and enduring legend Stevie Wonder. Rap music proved that it was bigger than its attendant break-dancing fad and grew in popularity through Run-D.M.C., LL Cool J, and the Beastie Boys. The blues welcomed two brilliant stars in Stevie Ray Vaughan and Robert Cray. Country music's top seller of the '80s was Willie Nelson, with Randy Travis and The Judds ranking as the hottest new stars. Gifted singer-songwriter Tracy Chapman won acclaim as an important new folk-influenced artist with 1988's powerful "Fast Car." Trumpet virtuoso Wynton Marsalis became the most important new jazz giant to hit the scene in decades.

Below the surface, a gradual transformation began; the minority within mainstream pop music (women, country, rap and "alternative" rock) would become the majority in the century's last decade.

Prosperity, A Wired World & A Hip-Hop Musical Decade

Iraq's invasion of Kuwait caused the Bush administration to assemble an international coalition that scored a swift victory over Iraqi forces in the 1991 Persian Gulf war. Bill Clinton was elected in 1992 as the first Democratic President in 12 years, and his two terms in office coincided with one of the longest periods of high economic growth and low inflation in modern history. Partly as a result, the federal government enjoyed its first budget surpluses in three decades. Crime rates fell to their lowest levels since the 1960s, but violence topped the headlines with events such as the O.J. Simpson murder trial, the bombings of the World Trade Center and a federal government building in Oklahoma City, and the deadliest of the several student shooting sprees taking place in Columbine, Colorado. A year-long scandal in 1998 centered on Clinton's indiscretions with a White House intern which resulted in his impeachment by the House, then his acquittal by the Senate.

The Cold War became a relic of history as the breakup of the Soviet Union was completed in 1990, and Boris Yeltsin was elected as Russian President the following year. Ethnic warfare raged among the former republics of Yugoslavia; the ensuing genocide led to the U.N.'s interventions in Bosnia and air attacks on Kosovo. While South Africa celebrated the end of apartheid, ethnic strife devastated Somalia, Zaire and Rwanda. The world became more electronically linked than ever — and the transmittal of information more instantaneous — as the Internet became a fact of everyday life for millions. The launching of the Hubble Space Telescope gave mankind stunning new views of the universe. In one summer week in 1997, the world mourned the passing of two of its most beloved women: Princess Diana's death in a Paris car crash and Mother Teresa's demise from heart failure.

James Cameron's late-1997 epic Titanic obliterated all previous records to become the biggest box-office hit of all time with domestic earnings of $600 million. Special-effects wizardry created the blockbusters Jurassic Park, Independence Day, Twister and Armageddon. Kevin Costner's sweeping Dances With Wolves (1990), the grisly The Silence of the Lambs (1991), and Steven Spielberg's classic Schindler's List (1993) were Oscar-winning smashes. The 1991 feminist adventure Thelma and Louise was one of the era's most-discussed films. Disney animated films returned to greatness with such hits as Beauty and the Beast (1991) and The Lion King (1994). Tom Hanks won back-to-back Oscars; Tom Cruise and Julia Roberts ranked as Hollywood's most bankable stars.

On TV, Ken Burns' 1990 documentary series The Civil War was a public TV landmark. Seinfeld was the decade's #1 TV comedy; other hits included Frasier, Friends, and Ally McBeal. Network dramas were topped by ER, NYPD Blue, Northern Exposure, The X-Files, and The Practice. Cable news networks such as CNN often received the highest ratings for televising breaking news events as they happened: Desert Storm, the police "chase" of O.J.'s Bronco, the L.A. riots over the Rodney King verdict, Anita Hill's testimony in the Clarence Thomas hearings, and reportage of Princess Diana's death.

Michael Jordan was the defining sports icon of the 1990s, leading the Chicago Bulls to six NBA championships and retiring after a final dramatic victory in 1998. Quarterback John Elway also retired on a high note after his Denver Broncos won a second straight Super Bowl in 1999; the Dallas Cowboys won three '90s NFL titles. Baseball's renaissance was symbolized by the home-run heroics of Mark McGwire and Sammy Sosa as both men topped 60 homers in two consecutive seasons, and McGwire smashed a record-demolishing 70 home runs in 1998. In one of boxing's most shocking upsets, Buster Douglas knocked out Mike Tyson in 1990; Evander Holyfield beat Douglas, and reigned for most of the decade as heavyweight champion. Pete Sampras was the world's #1 tennis player a record six years. Tiger Woods emerged as the most electrifying golfer since Arnold Palmer.

Hit Records And Artists Of The 1990s

Compact discs completed their takeover of recorded music, driving vinyl albums almost entirely out of the market. Cassettes and compact discs replaced vinyl 45s as the configuration of the single, with fewer and fewer airplay hits seeing release as singles. Breaking a record that had stood for over 50 years since Bing Crosby's "White Christmas," Elton John sold 32 million copies of his elegy to the late Princess Diana, "Candle In the Wind 1997."

For the first time ever in recorded music history, women occupied the majority of the pop charts. Mariah Carey was the decade's biggest-selling pop artist, launching a long string of #1 hits with her 1990 debut "Vision of Love." Whitney Houston had one of the top-selling albums ever with her 1992 soundtrack to The Bodyguard featuring "I Will Always Love You." Madonna, Janet Jackson, and Celine Dion were among the other leading solo artists in the decade of the diva. Female singer/songwriters such as Jewel, Alanis Morissette and Sarah McLachlan claimed a significant share of the pop pie.

Rap and hip-hop dominated record sales, crossing over to a huge white suburban audience and becoming the style-setter for teenagers. The shootings of 2Pac and The Notorious B.I.G. did little to diminish their continual presence on the charts. Rap godfathers Puff Daddy and Master P each headed up a hit-making stable of rappers and their own record labels. Lauryn Hill established herself as the queen of hip-hop. Boyz II Men and R. Kelly represented a return to classic R&B balladry.

Country music exploded on the radio, attracting the largest share of listeners. Garth Brooks was the biggest-selling artist of the '90s, across the board, amassing over 95 million CDs sold by decade's end! Shania Twain interjected pop-rock into her country to become a crossover superstar. Other top country performers included Alan Jackson, LeAnn Rimes, Clint Black, Reba McEntire, George Strait and the Dixie Chicks.

Increasingly, "alternative" became mainstream. U2 and R.E.M., college favorites of the early '80s, filled stadiums in the early '90s. Nirvana opened the door for fellow Seattle grunge bands like Pearl Jam and Soundgarden, and released the floodgates for the debut of "new rock"ers -- Stone Temple Pilots, Smashing Pumpkins, Live, Red Hot Chili Peppers, Green Day, and The Offspring — leaving room on the charts for hard-rockers Metallica.

More than 40 years after his first #1 hit, Tony Bennett enjoyed a remarkable resurgence as a hip jazz stylist. Wynton Marsalis won the first Pulitzer Prize for a jazz work in 1997.

The trend of old hits resurfacing as samples and remakes on new recordings mushroomed as the decade progressed. The younger set worshipped The Spice Girls and Backstreet Boys. "Macarena" madness in 1996 foreshadowed the Latin revolution, spearheaded by Ricky Martin, Jennifer Lopez and Enrique Iglesias, that would sweep the pop charts at the millennium's end.

In looking back at the incredibly vast myriad of artists and styles represented among the 20th century's biggest of big hits, one can only imagine as to who and what will define pop music in the 21st century.

SONG TITLE SECTION

This section alphabetically lists all songs that appear in the Year-By-Year and Artist sections. To the left of each title is its peak position and the year the song peaked on the chart. To the right of the title is its recording artist. A song with more than one charted version is listed once, with the artists' names listed below in chronological order. Songs that have the same title, but are different tunes, are listed separately, in chronological order.

Cross references have been used throughout to aid in finding a title.

Please keep the following in mind when searching for titles:

Titles such as "C-O-N-S-T-I-N-T-A-N-O-P-L-E" and "M-I-S-S-I-S-S-I-P-P-I" will be listed with their regular spellings.

Two-word titles that have the exact same spelling as one-word titles are listed together alphabetically. ("Dream Lover" is listed directly before "Dreamlover. ")

TOP ARTISTS

These artist rankings are based solely on the hits of this book and are not based on an artist's entire chart career. A picture of the top artist precedes each Top 40 listing.

The number that appears to the right of these artists' names is the number of points that they earned according to the following formula:

1) Each artist's charted titles are given points based on their highest charted position:

#1 = 100 points for its first week at #1,
plus 10 points for each additional week at #1
#2 = 90 points for its first week at #2,
plus 5 points for each additional week at #2
#3 = 80 points for its first week at #3,
plus 3 points for each additional week at #3
#4 = 70 points for its first week at #4,
plus 2 points for each additional week at #4
#5 = 60 points for its first week at #5,
plus 1 point for each additional week at #5
#6 = 50 points for its first week at #6
#7 = 40 points for its first week at #7

2) Total weeks charted are added in.

During the 20th century's first two decades, it was common practice for a top vocalists such as Arthur Collins & Byron Harlan to pair up and regularly record duets, while concurrently recording as a solo artists. The individual artists received the full point values for each of their duet hits. Also, many of the early top recording artists also performed with the era's popular quartets, such as the Peerless Quartet and the American Quartet. Each of the individual star members of these quartets were not given points for their quartet hits. After 1920, when two artists combined for a hit single, such as Aretha Franklin & George Michael, the full point value was given to both artists. A duo such as Simon & Garfunkel was considered a regular recording team; therefore, their points were not shared by either artist individually.

Because of the ever-expanding music industry and changes in chart methodology throughout the century, it was prudent to split the all-time artist ranking by half century. For the "Top 40 Artists By Half Century," points were given only for an artist's hits that appeared in each era. Points were split for artists that spanned both eras (Perry Como ranks at #33 for the first half-century and #8 for the second half-century).

The Charts From Top To Bottom

When the talk turns to music, more people turn to Joel Whitburn's Record Research Collection than to any other reference source.

That's because these are the only books that get right to the bottom of Billboard's major charts, with complete, fully accurate chart data on every record ever charted. So they're quoted with confidence by DJ's, music show hosts, program directors, collectors and other music enthusiasts worldwide.

Each book lists every record's significant chart data, such as peak position, debut date, peak date, weeks charted, label, record number and much more, all conveniently arranged for fast, easy reference. Most books also feature artist biographies, record notes, RIAA Platinum/Gold Record certifications, top artist and record achievements, all-time artist and record rankings, a chronological listing of all #1 hits, and additional in-depth chart information.

TOP POP SINGLES 1955-1996

Over 22,000 pop singles — every "Hot 100" hit — arranged by artist. Features thousands of artist biographies and countless titles notes. Also, for the first time, includes the B-side title of every "Hot 100" hit, doubling the number of titles listed in any previous edition. 912 pages. $79.95 Hardcover / $69.95 Softcover.

POP ANNUAL 1955-1994

A year-by-year ranking, based on chart performance, of over 20,000 pop hits. 880 pages. $69.95 Hardcover / $59.95 Softcover.

POP HITS 1940-1954

Compiled strictly from Billboard and divided into two easy-to-use sections — one lists all the hits artist-by-artist and the other year-by-year. Filled with artist bios, title notes, and many special sections. 414 pages. Hardcover. $44.95.

POP MEMORIES 1890-1954

Unprecedented in depth and dimension. An artist-by-artist, title-by-title chronicle of the 65 formative years of recorded popular music. Fascinating facts and statistics on over 1,600 artists and 12,000 recordings, compiled directly from America's popular music charts, surveys and record listings. 660 pages. Hardcover. $59.95.

TOP POP ALBUMS 1955-1996

An artist-by-artist history of the over 18,300 albums that ever appeared on Billboard's pop albums charts, with a complete A-Z listing below each artist of every track from every charted album by that artist. 1,056 pages. Hardcover. $89.95.

TOP POP ALBUM TRACKS 1955-1992

An all-inclusive, alphabetical index of every song track from every charted music album, with the artist's name and the album's chart debut year. 544 pages. Hardcover. $34.95.

TOP POP ALBUM TRACKS 1993-1996

A 3 1/2-year supplement to the above Tracks book — alphabetically indexes over 21,000 tracks from the more than 1,600 albums that have appeared on The Billboard 200 pop albums charts since 1992. 88 pages. Softcover. $14.95.
